ANGELA BOURKE is a Lecturer in the Department of Irish at the National University of Ireland (NUI), Dublin. She is the author of Caoineadh na dTr( Muire: Téama no Páise i bhFilocht Bhéil na Gaeilge (1983), a book of short stories, By Salt Water (1996), and many essays on the Irish oral tradition.

THOMAS A. BOYLAN teaches in the Department of Economics at NUI, Galway. He is a graduate of NUI, Dublin, and of Trinity College, Dublin. He is the author (with Tadhg Foley) of Political Economy and Colonial Ireland: The Propagation and Ideological Function of Economic Discourse in the Nineteenth Century (1992) and (with F. P. O’Gorman) of Beyond Rhetoric and Realism in Economics (1995).

THOMAS DUDDY teaches in the Department of Philosophy at NUI, Galway. He is the author of Mind, Self, and Interiority (1995) and numerous papers on the philosophy of mind, ethics and aesthetics. He is currently working on a history of Irish philosophy.

TERRY EAGLETON is the Warton Professor of English Literature at the University of Oxford and is the author of many books, including Heathcliff and the Great Hunger: Studies in Irish Culture (1995). He has written plays on Oscar Wilde and James Connolly, and an Irish novel, Saints and Scholars (1987). In 1997 he was awarded an honorary DLitt by the National University of Ireland.

TADHG FOLEY teaches in the Department of English at NUI, Galway. He is a graduate of NUI, Galway and of the University of Oxford. He is the author (with Thomas A. Boylan) of Political Economy and Colonial Ireland: The Propagation and Ideological Function of Economic Discourse in the Nineteenth Century (1992). He is the co-editor of Gender and Colonialism (1995).

LUKE GIBBONS is a graduate of NUI, Galway, and he teaches in the School of Communications at Dublin City University. He is the co-author (with Kevin Rockett and John Hill) of Cinema and Ireland (1988), the author of Transformations in Irish Culture (1996) and of the forthcoming The Colonial Sublime: Edmund Burke and Irish Romanticism.

EDWARD A. HAGAN is a Professor of English at Western Connecticut State University. He received his MA and PhD from SUNY at Stony Brook and his BA from Fordham University. He is the author of High Nonsensical Words: A Study of the Works of Standish James O’Grady (1986).

MARJORIE HOWES, who received her PhD from Princeton, teaches at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, and is the author of Yeats's Nations: Gender, Class, and Irishness (1996), which won the ACIS (American Conference for Irish Studies) Michael J. Durkan prize for the year's best book in literary and cultural criticism. She has published essays on nineteenth-century Irish literature, on postcolonial theory, and has edited a section of volume 4 of the Field Day Anthology.

TERRENCE McDONOUGH teaches in the Department of Economics at the National University of Ireland, Galway. He is a graduate of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. He is the co-editor of Social Structures of Accumulation: The Political Economy of Growth and Crisis (1994). He is also the author of articles in the areas of political economy, economic history, the history of economic thought and economic policy.

CHRIS MORASH is the author of Writing the Irish Famine (1995) and has edited a collection of Famine poetry, The Hungry Voice (1989). He has published essays on nineteenth-century Irish writing, and has contributed to reference works including the Oxford Companion to Irish Literature, Blackwell's Companion to Irish Culture and the World Encyclopedia of Contemporary Theatre. He is currently writing a history of Irish theatre. He is a Lecturer in the Department of English, NUI, Maynooth.

WILLA MURPHY is a Lecturer in English and Religious Studies at St Patrick’s College, Dublin City University. She is the editor of The Endless Knot: Literature and Religion in Ireland (1997), a special issue of the journal Religion and Literature.

NIALL Ó CIOSÁIN lectures in the Department of History, NUI, Galway. He is the author of Print and Popular Culture in Ireland 1750-1850 (1997), and has published articles on printing, popular culture and the Great Famine.

MARGARET PRESTON is currently completing her PhD in History at Boston College, on Irish women and philanthropy. In 1991 she received her MA in history from NUI, Dublin. Her most recent publication, in New Hibernia Review, is entitled 'The Good Nurse: Women Philanthropists and the Evolution of Nursing in Nineteenth-Century Dublin'.

NIAMH O'SULLIVAN is a Lecturer at the National College of Art and Design, Dublin. She is working on the biography of the Irish-American painter and illustrator Piloysius O'Kelly and is curating an exhibition of his work for the Hugh Lane Gallery of Modern Art in 1999.

SEÁN RYDER lectures in the Department of English at NUI, Galway. He is the co-editor of Gender and Colonialism (1995). He has published articles on aspects of early nineteenth-century Irish cultural nationalism and is editing the poems of James Clarence Mangan for Oxford University Press.

SANDRA F. SIEGEL writes on British literary culture and Anglo-Irish relations and teaches at Cornell University. She is the author of William Butler Yeats: Purgatory (1986). The essay included here belongs to her forthcoming book on Oscar Wilde.

EVA STÖTER, who holds an MA in Anglo-Irish Literature from NUI, Maynooth and an MA in Drama Studies from NUI, Dublin, is a PhD student in the Department of English, NUI, Maynooth.