Science and Technology in Nineteenth-Century Ireland

Juliana Adelman & Éadaoin Agnew

EDITORS

FOUR COURTS PRESS
Contents

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Juliana Adelman & Éadaoin Agnew
Introduction

INNOVATIONS

Thomas Duddy
The Irish response to Darwinism

Elizabeth Neswald
Asserting medical identities in mid-nineteenth-century Ireland: the case of the water cure in Cork

Ian Elliott
Grubbs of Dublin: telescope makers to the world

Tadhg O’Keeffe & Patrick Ryan
Representing the imagination: a topographical history of Dublin’s Monto from Ordnance Survey maps and related materials

INDIVIDUALS

Éadaoin Agnew
A microscopic look at Mary Ward: gender, science and religion in nineteenth-century Ireland

Seán Ó Dúinshléibhe
‘Pilfering from the first creation’: Dáibhé de Barra’s Parliament of weavers
Patrick Maume
Dominick McCausland and Adam's ancestors: an Irish evangelical responds to the scientific challenge to biblical inerrancy

INSTITUTIONS

James H. Murphy
The Irish-Catholics-in-science debate: John Tyndall, Cardinal Cullen and the uses of science at Castleknock College in the nineteenth century

Clara Cullen
'A pure school of science': the Royal College of Science for Ireland and scientific education in Victorian Ireland

Vandra Costello
Practical science and religious politics: the Glasnevin botanic gardens' Sunday opening controversy, 1861

Sherna Murphy
The learned gentlemen are in town: the British Association meeting of 1857 in Dublin’s popular press

INDEX